Title: A Seed Of Hope

Author: The Tel'dorei

Greetings and ishnu-dal-dieb, good fortune to your family, friend.

Are you at peace?

Take a moment to breathe deeply the fresh air that brings life to so many of nature's wonders.

Everywhere around you is the verdant pulse of life, sifting through the rustling leaves of trees, flowing gently in the sparkling streams.

Take a moment to bask in the goodness of it all.
Bathe and drink deeply of the land's wholesome bounty.

Nature is life. It is our nourishment and our shelter. From the plants and animals we eat, to the rocks and wood used to construct our homes.
Without it, we all would fade quickly from the world.

There are those who seek to harm the world and those that live within it.
Those that distort the natural life of things to their own purposes, corrupting the creatures, the plants, the very ground to suit their own twisted and evil needs.
Such destruction and corruption of nature will result in the downfall of all life.

We must not allow this to happen, friend!

Take this humble and simple seed and plant it to contribute just a small bit to nature. One small seed full of hope for the future.

Anu before dela'na, friend, may the sun guide your path.
